I was working on this problem in a previous class, and I found a hint which I thought was very vague and didn't really give any useful hint at all, so I was wondering if anyone could either prove or disprove this. Let V be a d -dimensional vector space. Suppose that V has a basis of cardinality n , and that no element of the basis is a maximal vector. Prove or disprove that $n=d$. A: $\dim V \geq n$, V has no maximal vectors, then $\dim V = n$. Then the hint is V is not a proper subspace of itself. and the defendant requests the substitution of Benigno Canal 26 Fernandez as the proper defendant in place of Rafael Lugo, the 27 new allegations that he states, based on information and belief, 3 1 cannot transform defendants' inadequate allegations regarding 2 substantial completeness into adequate ones regarding the 3 particularity of the claims. 4 Nevertheless, we affirm the dismissal of the complaint 5 for the reasons that follow. We find no error in the district 6 court's refusal to certify the appeal as frivolous. See 28 7
